On the very first day of this Folio, our usual Monday matinee rebroadcast brings Harry Cooper's special-for-KPFK production of Chekov's "The Sea Gull," and thereby hangs a tale (which suggests a whole series of puns, involving grains of salt and things, best omitted here). You see, "The Sea Gull" was impossible for us to produce.

For one thing, we don't have the facilities. For another, our studios are too small. We haven't tabulated the number of hours Mr. Cooper put in on this production, lest he realize the magnitude of his contribution, but we do know that he would probably be a younger and more vigorous man today had he had decent facilities with which to work.

The bills we owe aside (and we do owe a few, what with our subscription list being still below 6000—several thousand short of what we need just for current operating expenses), we'd really like to bring you more special-for-you productions like "The Sea Gull." That's one more reason why we keep talking about money all the time.

We're already looking for a bigger place. If anyone has any ideas, not to mention money, we'd like to hear from you. In the meantime, remember there'll be income tax next year too, and you might as well start planning those deductions now. Andrew Dowdy has exactly 3,816 more plays he wants to put on especially for you.
